The figures, which had been painstakingly sculpted out of snow, loomed down over the rest of the park. Passers-by would often comment on the statues' size and intricate detail. That was all they were though, statues.

One evening, however, when the park was completely deserted, and all that could be heard was the chit-chattering of the birds in the trees, it happened...

Buzz...Buzz...Buzz...

A faint red glow emitted from one of the buttons on the dial in the centre of his chest.

It couldn't possibly be happening, could it?

The impossible seemed to be happening: his head began to turn...
